Bio Brief :

Sak Segkhoonthod received a Ph.D. in Electronic System Engineering from Essex University in 1997. Since then, he joined the National Electronic and Computer Technology Center as a researcher at the Network Technology Lab where he was responsible for projects such as the Information Super Highway Testbed and the Government Information Technology Services (GITS). At GITS, he was in charge of setting IT infrastructure for Government agencies such as the Government Information Network. Since 2011, He has been working at the Electronic Government Agency, an agency in charge of providing IT services such as GIN, the G-Cloud and other IT services to all government agencies.