

Future satellite communication development requires improvement of existing spectrum orbit international regulations. In view of this challenge, economic approaches could complement existing technical approaches of management for satellite services in order to promote more efficient spectrum use. The report examines state and trends in satellite services development, analyses problems of existing regulations and proposes possible economic options to be applied.