

Alessandra Lustrati

Head of Digital Development

Foreign, Commonwealth & Development Office (FCDO)

Alessandra Lustrati is the Head of Digital Development in the UK Government's Foreign, Commonwealth & Development Office (FCDO). She oversees FCDO's policy and programming portfolio focused on the support to the inclusive, responsible and sustainable digital transformation of developing and emerging countries; and as part of her role, she is the senior global lead for the UK Digital Access Programme. She is also an accredited Senior Private Sector Development Adviser within FCDO. Before joining the UK Government, Alessandra worked with the United Nations, the European Commission, and in the private, non-profit and academic sectors - with an emphasis on economic development, and a deep interest in the role of digital technologies and innovation for the reduction of poverty and inequality. Alessandra holds an MSc in Development Studies from the London School of Economics. She has lived and worked extensively across Africa, Asia and Europe, and speaks seven languages.
