Generation Connect Youth Envoy, Generation Connect Gender Champion

Alfiah Rizqi Ramdhini is a 19-year-old undergraduate student in Meteorology Science from Indonesia. She has been discovering international diplomacy through female-community grassroots since high school, with a focus on climate policy and technology. Following her participation in STEM with "Generation Girl", she was selected to join the EQUALS project #GirlsInTech in 2022, which gave her insight into the diverse ways women lead in STEM fields. While studying, she realized that there is a gap between the study of climate and how information technology works in accelerating the advancement of climate solutions, for example, renewable energy. This led her to join the Society of Renewable Energy, which promotes clean energy through technology-based-panel to junior high schools and educates them about SDGs. Since becoming a Generation Connect Gender Champion, she has felt courage to represent young women under 20 who are passionate about advancing enviro-tech diplomacy. To better understand regional issues, she joined the ASEAN Youth Network as an advocate to find the core tech issues that commonly happen in Asia- Pacific. By celebrating Girls in Tech as a Gender Champion this year, she hopes to bring a perspective about how girls could design their own way to become changemakers.
