

Emanuele (PhD, Cantab, Trinity College) is Professor of Economics at Anglia Ruskin University, Governing Body Fellow at Hughes Hall, University of Cambridge, Vice-Rapporteur for the Study Group 1 of the International Telecommunications Union, Development Bureau and Associate Editor of the Eurasian Business Review.

His research focuses on Market power on the Internet, Mobile Internet access, ICT platforms, Digital divide, Crowdfunding, Diffusion of mobile social networking and Adoption of new technologies. He has advised governments, competition authorities and businesses in Europe, Africa and Asia on Internet access and competition economics, and has led multidisciplinary and multinational projects focussing on network competition, Internet infrastructure and mobile access in developing countries. Emanuele is the lead author of the UK Research Excellence Framework 2021 Impact Case Study on "Influencing Innovation Policy and Practice in the Digital Telecommunications Sector". He published on leading academic journals including International Economic Review, Economic Journal, Environment and Planning A, International Journal of Industrial Organization, International Journal of Production Economics, Journal of Industrial Economics, Technological Forecasting and Social Change, International Journal of Forecasting, Review of Network Economics, Information Economics and Policy, Eurasian Business Review, Spatial Economic Analysis, Journal of Economic Surveys. He co-edited "The Internet Revolution: A Global Perspective" published by Cambridge University Press.