

TUWILIKA SHAIMEMANYA

Tuwilika Shaimemanya is the National Officer leading UN-Habitat's work in Namibia and the agency's national focal person within the UN Resident Coordinator's Office. She was lead author of the City of Windhoek's Smart City Strategy (2026-2036) and facilitated implementation of a BMZ-funded Just Transitions in Vulnerable Places project in Namibia, supported by the United Nations Innovation Technology Accelerator for Cities (UNITAC).

Her work connects digital innovation, data systems and inclusive urban development. She has supported the operationalisation of Namibia's Housing Information System, including informal settlement profiling, and contributed to the national Diagnostic Study of Informality with the Bank of Namibia. She has previously worked with GIZ and the African Union Commission.

Tuwilika holds degrees in Architecture and City Planning and a Master of Urban Design from the University of Cape Town, and a Master in Sustainability and Business Innovation from EADA Business School, Barcelona.
