Nile Basin Society

April 19, 2003

Under “The essential requirements for the development of an equitable Information Society include” we should include something concerning open and transparent roles/laws/procurement for ISPs involvement in all national/regional infra-structure projects. These should ensure openness to competition and may be also that governments should work towards removing any undue barriers to spread of ICT, e.g. local call tariffs, licensing for wireless communication including send/receive satellites (usually refused under the pre-text of security) and unreasonable customs/taxes.
