

Mr. David Corrie - BIO DATA

David has worked for BT through all of its transformations from GPO in 1960's, and has held a number of senior positions during this time. These include Director of Studies for BT's world recognised Master's Programme, Head of Strategy and Business Planning, Head of Client relationships, and Head of BT's Obligations. He is presently Head of BT's Emergency Planning, which covers BT's obligations under the UK's Civil Contingency Act and BT's response to all levels of incident from cable failure to international disaster relief.

He graduated with a degree in electronic engineering, and is a Chartered Engineer, and Fellow of the Institute of Personnel and Development. He has completed post graduate studies at the University of California, Templeton College Oxford, and International Institute for Management Development in Switzerland. David has written a number of papers for international conferences, and is the winner of the FITCE "best paper" award, for his paper on "zero cost development".

In his present role he has led a BT Tsunami international relief team to Indonesia, was the utilities Gold commander at Police Gold during the London Bombings, and the BT Gold commander for BT's response to the South Asia Earthquake.

In his spare time David takes part in amateur dramatics. He is married with two grown up children, and lives in Buckinghamshire.
