1. BACKGROUND

A landlocked country in southern Africa, Eswatini is bordered by Mozambique to the northeast and by South Africa to the southeast, south, west and north. The country is divided into four areas known locally as the high, middle, low or bushlands and the Lubombo Plateau. The highland on the west rises to an altitude of above 6,000 ft., and has an average altitude of 3,500 ft. The middle land averages about 2,000 ft. and the lowland or bushland to about 1,000 ft. The entire country is traversed by rivers or streams, making it one of the best watered areas in Southern Africa.

Wherever you venture in the country's 17,364 sq. km (6,783 sq. miles) you will find something different. Eswatini is divided into four distinct regions which are easily explored without the need to travel great distances: the eastern Lubombo plateau; the low bush country of the Lowveld; the hilly middle-veld or grasslands; and the mountains, forests and waterfalls of the Highveld in the west.

The vegetation varies according to the regions, from the high summer rainfall area of the Highveld in the west, to the dryer Lowveld areas in the east. The altitude also varies from an average of 1 800m in the Highveld to around 400m in the Lowveld. Summers are very hot in the Lowveld eastern areas. Winters in the Highveld are typically beautiful and sunny during the day with chilly mornings and evenings, while the Lowveld winters are always warm.
