GENERAL INFORMATION

México City, formerly known as the “City of Palaces”, was founded in 1525 by the Spanish conquerors, after defeating the Aztecs built a new city on the ruins of Tenochtitlan, the Aztec Empire headquarters.

As in a mosaic, each of the main areas of Mexico City hosts a great cultural syncretism. In each of them, archeological sites, historical buildings, contemporary constructions, cultural centers and parks share the same space. This impressive city also boasts a wide variety of museums including the National Museum of Anthropology and History, the National Museum of Art, the Blue House of Diego Rivera and Frida Kahlo, and the Museum of Modern art.

Thanks to the fact that the city sits in the Central Highlands, at an altitude of 2,240 meters above sea level, its inhabitants enjoy a temperate climate almost all year. In addition to be the capital of the Mexican Republic, the city is the economic heart of the country, and seat of the federal powers of the union. For more information see: www.visitmexico.com
