

Asim Abdorabo is the Chief Planning Officer of Sudatel Telecom Group, where he leads the architecture, development and design of the 2G, 3G, 4G and future 5G network of the company's Telecom infrastructure, as well as setting the strategy and futuristic technology roadmap in his organization.

Prior to taking this role, Asim Abdorabo was the Chief Technology Officer of Chinguitel Mauritania, where he oversaw all technology operations including network architecture, development and network operation and services (CDMA & GSM and 3G platforms).

Asim previously worked at Sudatel Telecom group from 1999 to 2012, holding various technology leadership roles that were instrumental to maintaining the company's service availability with a track record in the telecom Industry for more than 20 years. Additionally, he led the initiatives of Digital transformation from the legacy networks to a cloud based platforms (Network virtualization and cloudification towards a Smart sustainable Cities SSC framework and infrastructure implantation).

Asim has held technology leadership and individual contributor roles at numerous technology and governmental institutions. He is a member in many governmental committees, e-Government initiative, National ICT Transformation, and the National cyber security.

He is an Instructor of many management and managerial topics, such as Strategic management, marketing management and general management in selected Sudanese universities. Furthermore, he is a recognized speaker in many international events, workshops, and seminars organized by NGT, ITU and the NTC.

Asim earned a Bachelor of Science degree in Telecommunication and Electronics from Gezira University. In addition to that, he earned a Master of Business administration in Marketing specialization. He is a Doctoral of Business Administration DBA candidate in management and business.