

Chatchai is a Vice President at Thailand's Software Promotion Agency. He has nearly 15 years of experience in operations, public policy, and management in ICT industry both from private and public sectors. After taking a leave of absence from his Ph.D. program at Stanford in 2000, he founded 2 companies which were later acquired by regional internet venture companies. His interest in programming led him to develop an app that was once ranked #2 on Apple's US AppStore. Prior to SIPA, he worked at the Ministry of Information and Communication Technology where he served as a computer scientist, analyst, FTA negotiator as well as spokesperson.

Chatchai earned double bachelor degrees in Electrical and Computer Engineering and in Computer Science from Carnegie Mellon University. He holds a master's degree in Electrical Engineering from Stanford University.