

Dr Amine Mcharek received his PhD from Korea Advanced Institute of Science and Technology (KAIST). His research focused on the impact of innovation on economic development in the context of developing countries. Prior to that, he received an M.S in electrical engineering and an M.A in IT management and policy. His ten years professional experiences, span areas such as engineering, public sector projects management and coordination, with responsibilities in advisory areas, consultancy, as well as International Cooperation development, and active participation in several ICT global developmental projects in more than a twenty countries. He acted international consultant for several private companies and government agencies as well as international institution and development banks such as Samsung, Netmundial, African development Bank, ITU. He is now a Project officer in the International Telecommunication Union on Standardization on Economic and policy issues and bridging the Standardization Gap (BSG) Programme.