International Telecommunication Union

A must-attend symposium ☞ organized jointly by the International Telecommunication Union and the United Kingdom Telecommunications Academy

Developing Resources for the ICT Society

Date: 11 – 15 August 2003

Venue: Cable & Wireless Campus Coventry, United Kingdom

This joint ITU/UKTA symposium is the third global event in a series to take place in the United Kingdom. The aim of this year's symposium is to explore new ways of developing human resources for a society that is increasingly dependent on information and communication technologies (ICT). Key areas of discussion include:

- the creation of an enabling legal and regulatory environment
- ICT applications and services
- human capacity building
- the role of the different stakeholders in the information society
- the needs of special groups
- the role of international cooperation

Who should attend? The symposium is intended for senior Human Resource Management and Development professionals in the ICT sector from government, as well as regulators, operators, manufacturers and academia who, within their organizations, deal with the day-to-day impact and consequences of the sector's evolution. Participants will also include those responsible for defining and/or implementing their organization's strategic objectives.
