Biography

David Vitézy is an expert in public transportation and urban mobility. He started his career as a transport activist, advocating for better public transportation in Budapest. He became the founding CEO of the Budapest transport authority, BKK, in 2010 and reformed the governance of the city's transport system. Under his leadership, several major public transport projects were completed successfully, from new tramway connections to a new bike sharing system and from intelligent passenger information solutions to a hundreds of new buses operating under a new framework.

Since 2016, he has, as director general, been responsible for the reconstruction of the Hungarian Transport Museum, including the design and implementation of a new permanent exhibition. He works as a transport expert and consultant domestically as well as internationally.
