

Someone has their sights on your child.

Young people are specifically targeted every day: by cyberbullies, by paedophiles, and by criminals that use these youngsters to steal and commit fraud. At the International Telecommunication Union (ITU), we believe that children everywhere have the right to a safe environment, even when that environment is a cyber one. That's why we've launched a Child Online Protection initiative (COP) and why we're working together with partners around the world to protect children from all kinds of cyberthreats. Because we believe that the Internet should be a playground for children. Not a hunting ground.
