The Uganda Communications Commission (UCC) is the communications regulator in Uganda. It aims to facilitate and enable the development of a modern communications sector in the country and to ensure the equitable geographical distribution of communications services and infrastructure mainly through private-public partnerships. UCC has initiated and implemented ICT strategies geared towards a dynamic, accountable and transparent market-led regulatory regime in a fully liberalized economy. Since 2006, UCC has been operating a technology-neutral licensing regime to ensure better ICT service delivery and to attract more FDI in the country through a competitive environment, in line with Uganda's development goals.
